1. A National Belgian Communist Party Security Service, known within the Party by the initials "SS", has been organized and Raoul Beligand has been named as national "responsible". The exact date of organization of the new service is not known, but a previous report stated that a meeting of the Protection and Security Service of the BCP was held in Brussels on 24 April 1951.
2. The "SS" comprises three former BCP security units, the "service d'ordre", the "gardes de locaux" and the "gardes de corps" and its mission is:
 - a. To discover informants and "provocateurs" within the Party.
 - b. To protect Party members and meeting places.
 - c. To surveil the activities of Party members.
 - d. To gather any information of interest to the BCP. This task has never been previously reported as a responsibility of any BCP security group.
3. It is believed that members of this service are not armed. They meet regularly once a week, however, for lessons in self-defense including lessons in "judo" to prepare themselves for action against the police, and to protect Party leaders and militants from police action or arrest.
4. In the future, the BCP intends to recruit members for this service from the less well-known but more dependable Party elements. The Party hopes to enlarge this service placing units throughout the country which can be called on for all Party demonstrations.
5. The Party has stated that such an organization has been necessitated because of the "fascist trickery" of the Belgian government.
